

Iberia Regional Air Nostrum consolidates its Italian schedule by introducing a new service between Madrid and Genoa

Starting next October 28, flights will operate from Monday to Sunday

The airline currently operates scheduled flights from Madrid to a total of four Italian cities: Bologna, Naples, Pisa and Turin

VALENCIA APRIL 27, 2007

Iberia Regional Air Nostrum, a European regional aviation leader, adds to its Italian service with a new flight connecting Madrid and Genoa. The service will begin next October 28, with flights from Monday to Sunday in both directions.

To be able to get off to an early start from Genoa, one of the airline's aircraft will spend the night at the airport, so making day trips a real possibility. Passengers will also be able to catch connecting flights from Barajas airport for both a large number of international destinations - South America, North America, Africa or Portugal - as well as for numerous domestic airports, drawing on the connection capacity offered by Grupo Iberia and Alianza Oneworld.

Iberia Regional Air Nostrum, which operates regular connections from Madrid to Bologna, Naples, Pisa and Turin, adds Cagliari, Catania, Olbia and Palermo to its destinations during the special August sub-season. At the present time the airline is the Spanish operator with most connections between Spain, Italy and France.

The service shortly to be introduced from Madrid to Genoa will operate from Monday to Sunday at 7 pm; while flights from the Italian city to the Spanish capital will depart at 8 am daily.

Iberia Regional Air Nostrum, a leading Spanish regional carrier, operates more than 450 flights a day and has a modern fleet of seventy or so aircraft with an average age of two and a half years. The company operates in eight different countries in Europe and North Africa, and in 2006 it carried 5.2 million passengers.

The good management, quality and prestige demonstrated by Air Nostrum have won it numerous awards. It is the only European regional company to win the Airline of the year award presented by the European Regions Airline Association (ERA) three times in its category, as well as receiving the Gold Medal for Sustained Excellence from the same organisation, the only airline to have received such a recognition.
